PREFACE

The index Travel Through Pictures has been compiled as a companion volume to Nature Index and General Index to Illustrations. It contains thousands of references to pictures and many interesting legends and facts about places all over the world. The atlas of the Encyclopædia Britannica was used, in so far as possible, to verify the place locations.

All towns, mountains, rivers, lakes, and the most outstanding sites of interest in the towns, included in the index proper, are listed in the cross reference index at the back of the book. This is a quick means of finding a place when one does not know in what part of the world it is located. The cross reference index gives the division of the index proper under which the place is listed.

This index should be useful to several different groups of people, such as reference librarians, those who cannot actually visit all the places about which they read or hear and so would like to see pictures of them, lecturers wanting pictures from which to make slides to illustrate their talks, travel bureaus and individuals planning travel tours, and those who want pictures with which to make their visions more real as they travel by their fireside.

- Ypiranga museum. (A marble building housing a collection of natural history, in the suburbs of Sao Paulo. It is built on the site where Dom Pedro I proclaimed independence of Brazil. The court of Lisbon was trying to increase the taxes & decrease the constitutional liberty of Brazil without allowing the people to speak in their own behalf. Dom Pedro I, son of the King of Portugal, was the representative of Portugal in Brazil. He favored the people of Brazil. On Sept. 7, 1822, as the prince was returning from a hunting trip, he was met at a small stream called Ypiranga, by a messenger bearing an order for his immediate return to Portugal. When he had read the message he called his followers & declared to them he would never leave Brazil & his watchword was to be "Independence or death." The people liked him & united with him. Soon his watchword spread all over Brazil. One month later he was proclaimed Emperor of Brazil. There are several streets in Brazil named "7th de Setembro" in memory of his proclamation of independence by the stream of Ypiranga.) Pan Amer. M. 32: 266 Ap. '21.

Lambton castle. (By the river Wear. There is a legend that "The Lambton heir went fishing one Sunday morning and caught a very repulsive looking small snake or worm. He flung it into an adjacent well remarking to a passerby that he thought he had caught the devil. Soon after he went to the East to fight the infidel and was away seven years. In that time the worm grew so large it issued from the well and wound itself 3 times around a nearby hill 300 yards in circumference. The monster terrified the whole countryside and brought a curse on the Lambton heirs for 9 generations. The monster snake drank the milk from all the cows, devastated the flocks and the countryside. No one could kill him for as fast as they cut pieces off his body they joined together again. The heir consulted a witch who advised him to have a suit of armour made fitted all over with sharp blades. He should then go and fight the worm but he must by no means forget that he must kill the first living thing he met after the fight was over. He went out to fight the monster, which wound itself round his body. The blades cut deep into it but the parts kept joining together as fast as cut off. The heir had edged nearer and nearer the river Wear. The cut off pieces now dropped into the river and the current carried them away so fast they could not join together. The heir then blew three blasts on his trumpet to show that he was victorious. It had been arranged to send a dog to meet him but his father was so excited he rushed out to meet him. The son could not kill him and so the Lambton family was doomed for 9 generations never to die in their own beds. 8 Lambtons died away from their homes. The 9th Lambton was General Lambton who lived to old age. Fearing the prophecy might be fulfilled through the agency of his servant, he kept a horsewhip by him to the last and eluded the curse. However neither of two later lords have died at home.") Travel 49: 36 My. '27.

"Ship of Ulysses" (Odysseus). (Called "Mouse island" because it is so neat. Homer called it a "Mark of vengeance on the sable deep." Legend says Poseidon received permission from Zeus to turn the sailing vessel of Ulysses (Odysseus) into stone, because of his dislike of him. He said "Friend . . . when all the people of the town look off and see her sailing, then turn her to stone close to the shore, yet like a swift ship still, that all the folk may marvel . . . and, glancing at his neighbor, a Phoenician man would say, 'Hah! who stopped that swift ship on the sea as she was running in?' Bishop's Hat mt.

Christophe's citadel. (Built by the black emperor of Haiti, on a steep precipice 700 feet above the Grand Boucan canyon. It is said that every one who helped to build it was put to death so that he could not tell the plan. Wishing to make his army seem very large to guests he would have them march past the guests, around the citadel, through an underground room at the back (where each group changed its uniform every time it passed through) and appear again in front of the guests in a different kind of uniform, therefore prolonging the parade & making it seem to have thousands of soldiers. One day, wishing to display to guests the discipline of his soldiers he marched several companies of them over the precipice in perfect order. It is 8 miles from Milot.) Chile 10: 146 My. '31.

Castrogiovanni. ("Ovid described its climate as one of perpetual spring. Cicero said its flowers bloomed throughout the year & were the finest he had seen. Plutarch exalted its freshness. Aristotle, Livy, Strabo wrote of its woods, lakes & verdure." There is a legend that Pluto captured Persephone here by the lake, while she was gathering flowers. Her father, Zeus, knew what became of her but her mother, Demeter, did not know it until her daughter was in Hades. To please Demeter Zeus sent Hermes to Hades to bring back Persephone but it was too late, she had already eaten a pomegranate Pluto had given her, & so could only come back to Castrogiovanni half the time. She came back to her mother each year in the springtime & was the daughter & helper of the goddess who presided over the fertility of the earth. The other half of the year she was the goddess of death.) Monroe: Sicily, p. 28.

 Fountain of Arethusa. (There is a legend that "Arethusa was one of the beautiful & blushing nymphs of Artemis, who one day while hunting the roebuck, ran dishevelled & breathless from the forest to the banks of a stream. First she waded into its cool waters; & then unfastening her tunic she plunged into its deeper parts. To her astonishment she felt the water quivering with love & caressing her as though it had a soul. Then she heard a noise & instantly took flight. But she was pursued by Alpheus. She ran over plowed fields & through thick forests, over mountains & through meadows, but always followed by the lover. At last wearied with long running she called upon Artemis the goddess of chastity, who wrapped her in a cloud just as Alpheus was about to clasp her in his arms. A subterranean passage was opened for her feet & she made her way under the sea to Sicily, where she came to the surface on the island of Ortygia as a fresh spring over which she has ever since presided.") - Lindos. (Legend says: The patron goddess Aethena is supposed to have been born on the island of Rhodes. "When she sprang from the brow of Zeus, the sun-god, Hyperion, bade the people of Lindos to be the first to build an altar to her. In obedience to this command they went to their acropolis, and, since in their haste they had forgotten to bring fire with them, they laid out the sacred precinct with fireless sacrifices. Then Zeus, out of pleasure at the homage shown his daughter, caused a yellow cloud to draw nigh and rained on them abundant gold, while the grey-eyed goddess herself bestowed upon them every art, so that they surpassed all mortal men by their deftness of hand, and along the road rose works of art like unto beings that lived and moved; and great was their fame.") Tradition says: The Virgin appeared before the Indian, Juan Diego, and told him to gather some flowers on the desert Tepeyac Hill and take them to the Archbishop as proof that she had appeared. Then a bubbling spring sprang up under her feet. When he unfolded his mantle he found a miraculously painted picture of the Virgin with features & complexion like an Indian. The picture now hangs in the center of the church altar. The chapel is built over this spring and whoever drinks from it must perforce return to Mexico. It is said to have healing powers.) Cameron: Mexico, p. 176.

NORWAY

(Legend says: "When the world was made there were stars & lakes, hills & trees, but no mountains to break the monotony. And so an angel was sent forth with large bur-lap bags full of stones. He dropped some rocks in Monte-negro, and a good few in Switzerland, and then he was very weary, for the bags were heavy on his wings. Now an alti-tude of 10,000 feet is not an ideal place for a nap, even for an angel. But the angel was very tired and he must have dozed off, for he collided with a cloud. The bags of stones burst and all the craggs and mountains of Norway were made.") Country Life 62: 86, 88 My. '32.

He did not dare tell this to the officials nor to continue his work. He told his wife about his trouble, but no one else. That night she stole out to the bridge and set fire to the scaffolding that supported the arches. The bridge was burned so badly the man had to rebuild much of it and was able to correct the flaw without anyone knowing about it.) Bell: A Pilgrim, p. 196.

Castle of Chillon. (On Lake Geneva. Byron wrote of it in his "Prisoner of Chillon." Francis Bonivard was imprisoned here from 1530 to 1536. Byron did not know this story but by a curious coincidence used this name for his prisoner. In the early days hundreds of Jews were tortured & then buried alive here because they were suspected of poisoning the wells of Europe. Bonivard, the Swiss patriot, was imprisoned in its dark dungeon for 6 years, and not a sound was heard from him except on stormy nights when he would sob & cry. Finally his countrymen burst into his cell where they found him thin and pale, still chained to a column, around which he had walked for six years. When they told him he was free his first question was: "And Geneva?" "Free also!" they told him.) Natl. Geog. M. 24: 912 Aug. '13; 35: 400 Je. '19.

 Dome of Tamerlane's tomb. (Iron hook on wall under dome is old execution hook the emirs of Bokhara used to torture the "Enemies of Islam." They inserted it under the spinal column of their victim and left him hanging exposed to the sun rays until he died. Small openings under the dome, called "death windows," were where prisoners were thrown into the courtyard below. There was a small torture room under the dome where prisoners were placed at night "to listen to the wind moaning their death song." The natives say the beautiful Persian greens & blues of the enameled tiles "form a constant prayer for him that knew no fear and the flower of his life—Tamerlane and Bibi Khanum.") Travel 52: 11 Mar. mountain side, told him the following story. "One day Van Hunks wandered to the mountain top, where he was accosted by the Devil. The two entered into a wager as to who was the stronger smoker, the stake being Van Hunks' soul against the kingdom of the world. The volumes of smoke from their pipes still account for the cloud which hangs over the mountain.") Chilvers: Seven wonders, p. 71.

Belle Isle park. (Named after Bell Cass, a daughter of Gov.

Cass. Indian legend tells how the island was formed. It says: "Sleeping Bear," who lived on the eastern shore of Lake Mich., had a very beautiful daughter, whom he was afraid would be stolen. He put her in a box which he floated on the lake and tied to the shore with a long rope. North, South and West winds fell in love with her. Their fierce rivalry caused a hard storm which broke the rope holding her box to the shore. The box floated down to the lodge of the Keeper of the gates of the Great Lakes. He married her. Sleeping Bear was so angry he caused a terrible storm to wash the Gate Keeper's house away. The box, in which the maiden had lived, was broken to pieces. Its fragments formed Bell Isle and there she lived ever after.) Mid-Week Pictorial 26: 15 Sept. 29, '27.

The Alamo. (Built for a Franciscan mission in 1722. Used as a fort during Texas struggle for independence. Feb. 23, 1836 three hundred men were besieged in this mission, by 4,000 Mexicans. The siege lasted until March 6th. It had to surrender as all the occupants had been killed but six, including Col. Crockett, Col. Bowie and Col. Travis, who were then killed by order of Santa Ana. A servant-woman and her child were the only ones to escape. The child was later adopted and educated by the state of Texas. At the battle of San Jacinto, in which the Mexican commander Santa Ana was defeated, the Texans had for their battle-cry "Remember the Alamo.") Arch. Forum 55: 585-6 Nov. '31.

Bryce canyon. ("The pink cliffs." In southern Utah. Named after the Mormon, Ebenezer Bryce. 50 miles east of Cedar City. Famous for its vivid coloring. There is an Indian legend which says: The Sun god fell in love with a very beautiful fairy princess, but refused to marry her until he found a place lovely enough for her to live in. As he travelled around the world each twenty-four hours he looked for a home for her but could find no place he considered beautiful enough. At last he appealed to Dame Nature to help him find a place for his princess. She suggested the pink cliffs of Utah, which were at that time a lovely level plateau. The next day, as he passed over the pink cliffs, he looked at them very carefully and decided they might do so he asked Dame Nature to build the most beautiful palace in the world for him on the pink cliffs. She set to work and carved away the softer elements of the cliffs until she had indeed made a wonderful palace of towers, columns, pinnacles carved and colored in wonderful designs. The princess was delighted with her new home and loved to wander around exploring the vast rooms. One day she came upon a place where there were thousands of beautiful columns, in colors white, red and pink. She ran in among these columns, became lost & was never seen again. Every day as the Sun god passes over the canyon he looks for her and sends his warmest rays into the hall of columns in the "Silent city," but never a trace of her can he find, and to this day he mourns his lost bride.) "Monticello." (Home of Thomas Jefferson. Name means "Little mountain." Named from the mountain on which it is built. Several feet of dirt was cut from the mountain top to level it so the house could be built there. Jefferson designed the state capitol and the state university. He could sit in the yard, at "Monticello," and watch the building of the university, through a telescope. He also planned James Monroe's house, "Ashlawn," which is near "Monticello." Jefferson and Monroe were close friends. Monroe sent plans for his home, from Europe, to Jefferson and told him to revise them as he thought best, to buy a tract of land near "Monticello" on which to build the house, and be practical in the use of the $1,000.00, which was all he could afford to spend on the house.)
